BEFORE THE COMPLETION OF THE LINES NOW COMPRISING THE FRISCO SYSTEM, a trip between the Southeast and the Missouri or the Southwest and the Mississippi rivers was looked upon with misgivings, a monotonous, if not a tiresome, journey being invariably contemplated. All of the lines of railway which engage in Southwestern or in Southeastern traffic have improved their facilities, perhaps to a greater extent than in any other sections of the Union; but they have not been able to change the topography of the country they traverse, and the fact will always remain that the Frisco is the only natural scenic route through the territory which it serves. This system crosses the different ranges of the Ozarks three times: the Ozarks proper, in Missouri; the Boston Mountains, in Arkansas; and the Kiamichis, in the Indian Territory; winding its way in and out of these differently designated ranges for practically the entire distance. The scenery is all picturesque —much of it grand. Many of us in the Southwest are prone to consider the grandeur of the Adirondacks, the Alleghenies, or the Rockies, while at our very doorstep the blue Ozarks, the rival of any of the other ranges, are almost overlooked.

The few views we here present were taken along the Frisco System, and will be remembered by its patrons. There are thousands of others distinctively as fine; in fact, any one who has traveled the line will describe the Frisco as a continual panorama, from end to end.

Comfort is, perhaps, the most potent consideration in a railway journey. Nature has enabled the Frisco to provide it most adequately, so far as air, scenery, and water are concerned. Mr. Fred Harvey has made it possible for us to guarantee preëminently the best railroad restaurant and café-car service extant. The Frisco is equipped with solid wide-vestibuled trains, observation sleepers, cars lighted and cooled by electricity, which some of our competitors are supplied with to some extent as well; but what we offer as a particular and individual inducement for travel is, that THERE IS SOMETHING TO SEE ALONG THE FRISCO.
